

Social-Emotional Development is crucial for students at that age. We, at GVS, understand the importance of peer relationships and friendship and arrange for positive and productive peer interactions.

Social development is a crucial part of young teens' development. Relationships with others can boost their confidence, encourage the sense of belonging, and help them to establish meaningful relationships. Social Development includes the role of peers, the role of the family, the role of the community, and the role of the media. Classrooms are set in a way so that students can openly interact and communicate with each other. Interaction is a key aspect of social development so allow group projects and time for adolescents to communicate with each other.

Teens go through a time when everything in their world is changing so they need their families' support where stability and security are offered. We support our students' families and guide them through their children's phases of life during school years.

Teens' world cannot be understood without considering the enormous power of the mass media, especially social media, movies and popular music. GVS teachers direct all related applications to be employed in a useful healthy manner.

When it comes to Psychological development, all staff members save no effort to understand their intensified feelings of vulnerability. They are engaged in many experiences which help teens realize that their challenges are not unique.

Self-Esteem

GVS works on improving each student's self-esteem (not solely connected to improving academic achievement). Nurturing students' self-esteem through daily interactions with teachers and the environment created inside and outside of classrooms. Reflective feedback is important, how students interpret and process it determines its effect on their self-esteem.

Achievement Motivation

Achievement Motivation is the student's drive, desire and persistence to reach a goal. We teach them and guide them to believe they can be successful in school and all other aspects in life.
